

Veolia invited UWT to Paris

Veolia, which is one of the world leading actors within water technology, invited on May 28th the UWT Research School to visit Veolias' development center in Paris. Thirteen PhD students and several of the UWT supervisors participated. The visit clearly demonstrated that Veolia performs extensive research and development work within the whole urban water system and gave the student insight into the spectra of interesting technological challenges. This kind of experiences will most likely have the anticipated effect that Veolia and the Danish company Krüger (which is owned by Veolia) will stand out as attractive future working places for the students. UWT is thankful for the invitation and will like to continue to contribute to such positive experiences in the future.
